Spirit_off Open Call

Spirit_off: Dreaming Utopia by Dubmorphology is a live, audio visual installation that will evolve throughout an evening of beats, moving image and performance with guests Denise Weston, Danielle Allen, Weyland McKenzie, Winnie & The Rockettes... and you.

Dubmorphology is a London based research, production and performance project that uses sound and visual environments to navigate the complex and ambiguous territory of social conflict. The core collective is comprised of artists Trevor Mathison and Gary Stewart, who often work in collaboration with invited artists. Working through the sonic and visual lenses of radical possibility, they draw on experiences as children born in Britain of post-war migrants to create new and oblique relations to received meaning. Their work emerges from the artists' direct response to specific sites and environments and explores social and political issues through a combination of historical and contemporary material. Playing with fractured montage techniques, Dubmorphology question where truth, if at all, lies and how it is constructed through culture and ways of seeing, hearing and sensing our world. The work incorporates elements of dub and musique concrète which functions as a binding agent for disparate visual material that is bound together by what might be dubbed 'post-soul noise'

If you would like to feed your thoughts and experiences into Dubmorphology's unique Materials Montage Mixer and contribute to the Spirit_off installation, then send us a digital file (jpeg, wav, doc, pdf, rtf are all welcome) or turn up in person with your phone on Saturday 21 September, between 11am and 4pm to play with the artists and add pictures and audio to the montage. No previous experience necessary.

All contributors will be credited and those who turn up in person receive a free wristband for the London-wide Emerge Festival 27/28 September 2019
